ANTHROPOLOGY MAJOR: ROADMAP (Catalog 2006-2008)

Anthropology includes four sub-fields: biological anthropology, archaeology, socio-cultural anthropology, and linguistic anthropology. Students majoring in anthropology at CSUEB take courses in all four fields, but they also will choose to concentrate in either a) archaeology and biological anthropology or b) socio-cultural and linguistic anthropology. While some specific classes are required of all students, other requirements may be fulfilled by selecting courses from a list of options. This means that each student’s course of study will be unique. This document presents a suggested pathway through the major. We encourage students to consult individually with a faculty member to draw up a tailored plan for completing all major requirements, taking student interest and course availability into consideration. To facilitate planning, the department has posted a two-year plan for course offerings on our departmental website.

Note: If you declared your major before fall quarter 2006, you may be able to select an earlier version of the major requirements. Please consult with a faculty advisor in the department.

Key to symbols:
* This course is required.
◊ This course is offered every year. Please check the class list to see in which quarter(s) it will be offered.
